The tropics are starting to calm down, you can feel a hint of autumn in the air, and our daylight hours are shortening. Hang in there, Florida fall is just around the corner. I am starting to prepare for my most dreaded day of the year; gulp, "goodbye Daylight Saving Time." (November 5) Things are pretty quiet in the CCC this month, so this newsletter should prove to be a "shortie" with some FYI tidbits.

RECAP September's meeting featured Steffen Mittelhaeuser, adjunct professor at Daytona State College. Steffen gave a basic tutorial in Adobe Lightroom. His presentation was well received and quite informative, especially for those not proficient in Lightroom. He is a Lightroom instructor in the Photography Dept at DSC and is available for workshops. Thank you Steffen.

SOME GENERAL FYI Scott Kelby addressed an issue about the NIK Collection in Shutterbug magazine. Google no longer supports NIK and with each upgrade in its operating system, the chance of continuing NIK continues to dwindle. Kelby suggests investing in Macphun's Luminar program which costs $69.00, but unfortunately, is only available to Mac users at this time.

I received an email from Kathleen Pruett about a free seminar sponsored by Epson. It is part of their DTG Road show which features the latest in Epson technology. This event will feature the P series printer and dye sub machines that focus on photography / fine art side printing. RSVP is required. If any are interested you may contact Michael D Plummer at mplummer@dtgweb.com

Art Wolfe has scheduled his Photography as Art Seminars for 2018. He has set the date of May 20, 2018 for his seminar in Tampa Fl. The cost is $225.00 for the one day seminar. His web page states "you can take advantage of early bird pricing," and Ans informed me that if you book via her, there is a discount. For details go to Photography As Art

On that note, all I have left to say is "give me a dry, sunshine day" so I can be like the hippo in the header!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
